An Iron Eating Worm.

A German paper—name not given—quoted by the Iron and Coal Trades Review of London, England, tells a story, which, however improbable, seems to have every appearance of truth. The account is given as follows: The existence has just been discovered of a detestable microbe which feeds upon iron with as much gluttony as the phylloxera upon the vine. Some time ago the greatest consternation existed among the engineers employed on the railway at Hagen by the accidents occurring all at the same place, proving that some terrible defect must exist either in the material or construction of the rails. The German government directed an inquiry to be made and a commission of surveillance to be formed for the purpose of maintaining constant watch at the point where the accidents had occurred. It was not, however, until after six months had elapsed that the discovery was made. One of the employees had observed that the surface of the rails appeared to be corroded, as if by acid, to the extent of 100 yards. The rail was taken up and broken, and it was perceived that it was literally hollowed out by a thin gray worm, to which the qualification of "railworm" was assigned, and by which name it is to be classed in natural history. The worm is said to be two centimeters in length, and of the size of the prong of a silver fork in circumference. It is of a light-gray color, and on the head carries two little glands filled with a corrosive secretion, which is ejected every ten minutes upon the iron. This liquid renders the iron soft and spongy, and of the color of rust, and it is then greedily devoured by the insect. "There is no exaggeration," says the official report of the calamity, "in the assertion that this creature, for its size, is one of the most voracious kind, for it has devoured thirty-six kilograms of rails in a fortnight!"—Mining and Scientific Press, San Francisco.

Summer's Physical Greatness.

Mr. Sumner stood six feet two inches high without his shoes, and he was so well built that his height was only noticeable when he was near a person of ordinary size. But there was a manner about him, a free swing of the arm, a stride, a pose of his shaggy head, a sway of his broad shoulders, that gave to those who knew him best the idea that he was of heroic size. Then, too, there was something in the intent look of his deep-set eyes, his corrugated brow, the frown born of intense thought, and his large head, made to seem yet larger by its crown of thick, heavy, longish gray hair, all of which gave the idea of physical greatness; but with his frequent smile the set frown passed, his whole appearance changed, and his face became like a dark-lantern suddenly lighted. His smile effected a wonderful transformation in his whole appearance, and it set up a peculiar sympathy between himself and its recipient.

For one of his sedentary habits, he had extraordinary strength, and yet he was not an athlete. While in Washington his only exercise was walking, and as he believed that it was the pace rather than the distance which tells, when opportunity offered he would go at a rate that amazed beholders. Some persons attempting to join and keep up with him only succeeded by taking an occasional hop, skip and jump, such as children practice when walking with their parents. Up to the time of his injuries he walked much in Washington, for, as he said, he could outwalk omnibuses, and give them long odds.—Arnold Burges in The Cosmopolitan.

The following from one of our exchanges so fully and clearly expresses our views of the subject that we copy it without comment: "You have an undoubted right to stop a newspaper when you feel disposed, upon payment of arrears. Do not hesitate to do so on account of the tenderness of feeling for the editor. Don't you suppose he would stop buying sugar of you, or meat, clothing or dry goods, if he thought he was not getting his money's worth, or desisted to patronize some other concern? And why should you not exercise the same privilege with regard to him? And when you discontinue a paper, do so manfully. Don't be so spiteful as to throw it back to the postmaster with a contemptuous 'I don't want it any longer' and have 'refused' written on the margin, and have the paper returned to the editor. No gentleman ever stopped it in that way—no matter if his head is covered with gray hair that should be honorable. If you do not wish to longer receive a newspaper, write a note to the editor like a man, saying so—and be sure that the arrears are paid. This is the only way to stop a newspaper.

"Patsy, ol've been insulted. Micky Doolan called me a liar," said an excited Irishman.

"An' phwat are yez goin' to do about it?"

"I don't know. Phwat would ye do, ay were me?"

"Well, Dinny, I think O'd tell the troot' oftener."—Washington Critic.

A man in Nebraska has invented a new fly-trap. He saturated a blanket with coal oil and hung it up in his house. When it was covered with flies he set it on fire. Blanket and flies burned splendidly, but it is reported that the inventor has had some difficulty since in finding his house.

A Dubuque grocer named Scott offered to let a woman named Taylor strike him with a codfish for twenty-five cents. It was all a joke, you know, but she paid the money, gave the codfish a whirl or two, and when it hit grocer Scott it broke his jaw and tore off part of his ear.

Eight Important Rules.

Pasted over the desk of the city editor of a Georgia paper are the following instructions:

"All brides are lovely, beautiful and accomplished, except they be old and tough widows, and then they are amiable and cultivated."

"All merchants who advertise are enterprising, wide-awake and a credit to our city. The names of those who do not advertise must not appear in our paper."

"All old lawyers are able and worthy a place on the Supreme Bench. Young lawyers are promising and silver-tongued."

"Conductors on passenger trains are gentlemanly and courteous."

"Doctors are eminent."

"Farmers are intelligent."

"Candidates who put their announcements in our paper are gaining ground every day. Those who do not announce are likely to be defeated."

"Under no circumstances must these rules be broken. F. Middleton Pryor, editor and proprietor."—Arkansas Traveler.

It is a singular fact that the United States, while strong in resources, is entirely dependent upon foreign countries for the gold and tin which is used in decorating her officers of the army and navy when on dress parade. A military officer, no matter what flag he fights under, must have a certain amount of glitter about his shoulders or he cannot do justice to the government which employs him. Epaulets and shoulder knots are as essential to a well regulated army or navy as are the guns and ammunition used on the enemy. Yet, in spite of the fact that there are 6000 or 8000 officers in the United States who must have gold cord, gold lace and gilded epaulets, there is not a single manufactory in the country where this "war material" can be made.—Boston Advertiser.

Newspaper advertising is admittedly far more effective than any other. It reaches further and finds access to more people. The article published by one newspaper is printed by others and has the benefit of all these different circulations. The prosperity of communities, like that of the successful merchant, is advanced by judicious advertising. The newspaper can be made of the greatest value to any community. It speaks at once to thousands. Each day it is penetrating all parts of the United States, either to its subscribers or its hundreds of exchanges. From its columns other newspapers throughout the Union are daily making extracts. East, West, North and South your local newspaper travels and is a welcome visitor.—Phoenix Gazette.

A young couple in Dakota received the following: "From groom to bride, one bull pup, one yaller dog, pair of water spaniels, and a pure meerschaum pipe with tobacco; from bride to groom, one good shotgun, one bowie knife, rifle and three dogs; from parents of bridegroom, one fiddle, one banjo, spotted pup and six pounds of tobacco; from the Shotgun Club, of which the young couple were members, one English mastiff and a pair of silver-mounted pistols. Referring to these gifts, the Dakota Sanflower remarks: "It is seldom that a young couple start out in life so well equipped for perfect happiness, and Jock and Jule have the best wishes of this office."

"John, I wish you'd rock the baby."

"What'll I rock the baby for?"

"Because he's not very well, and what's more, half of him belongs to you and you should not object to rocking him."

"Well, don't half belong to you?"

"Yes."

"Well, you can rock your half and let my half holler."—Puck.
